Market

Unmet need for mental health support

According to a survey, 68% of directors of adult social services are facing a strongly increased number of people presenting with mental health issues post Covid-19 in the UK.¹

British directors of adult social services have reported a rise of people being referred for support from the community of more than 10% over the first half of 2021.¹

17% of respondents to a survey state to not have gotten the help they needed when trying to contact NHS staff out of office hours if they had a crisis.²

58% of Brits feel like their trusts have not been able to meet the demand for community adult mental health services recently and have reported an increased waiting time to access treatment.³
